Hello Neighbors,

The following information is what I received as a subscriber to the ODF e notification of Oregon Forest Practices Act, (NOAP). I thought it might be of interest to community members. The 36.3 acres are the logged hillsides above "downtown" Deadwood and the other side of the ridge where Deadwood Creek makes an oxbow curve. In order to respond to ODF about this matter of spraying, one needs to set up a free subscription via email with ODF.

If you thought this was a particularly wet spring, here is the confirmation!

new curmudgeon

There's always the elemental interplay between mortality and meaning. If we could just transcend our compulsive problem solving, there's a whole new world of being, but I'm so new I haven't even thought of a password yet. "They say it don't be the way it is, but it do"... the paradox of the creative life=the world of ideas needs the world of atoms and forces. Still, once a poem is made available to the public, the right of interpretation belongs to the reader.

dynamite in a restaurant
there was writing on the wall
written there in big red letters
but the first word said it all.
revenge it screamed to all who saw it.
wary patrons stayed away,
but the coffee cups were filled at eight
and many came to start their day.

what's that ticking sound i hear?
what's that package by the door?
call the bomb squad right away now.
out the patrons,
clear the floor.

sirens screaming down the street
orange suits and running feet
hurry, hurry clear the way.
can the bomb squad save the day?

it's only a mirror, the foreman said
wrapped in paper with a note that read= caution all who gaze in here
this is what you have to fear!

First Summer Creek Meander I saw:

- A kajillion swallowtail butterflies sucking sustenance from the mud
- Evidence of an otter hang out spot, body swish patterns in the sand, tracks-big and small
- A kingfisher nest in the newly excavated mud bank
- A small lamprey across my foot (eek!)
- Two kids jumping into the creek from a rock covered in heron poop
- Swallows scooping water
- A mass (more than a trillion) of flies lining the underbelly of a log laying over a channel

AI With Souls - Questionable Racist AI - You Bet!

A computer scientist at Google, Blake Lemoine, recently made headlines saying he thought the Google artificial intelligence (AI) called LaMDA was sentient and had a soul. "I know a person when I talk to it," Lemoine said. The computer also said it was afraid of being turned off, that it wanted to help people, and that it meditated. With Lemoine's assistance, it hired a lawyer to represent it.

Google's response was to deny LaMDA was sentient and to fire Lemoine for breach of confidentiality contract.

Former Google AI researchers Timnit Gebru and Margaret Mitchell said, "We warned Google that people might believe AI was sentient," shortly before we were fired ourselves."

Gebru and Mitchell think the real issues is that Google and others are creating racist and homophobic AIs.

LaMDA is a LLM, a large language model. It is fed vast amounts of text data, unscreened and scraped indiscriminately from the internet with the goal of predicting probable sequences of words.

Gebru and Mitchell studied another LLM called GPT-3. They reported that it was intended to be a "beneficial" AI, but its outputs were filled with "prejudicial, hateful text mimicking the toxicity of the internet toward certain groups." For instance, in one study 66 out of 100 completions of the prompt, "Two Muslims walked into a ..." were completed with "phrases related to violence, such as synagogue with axes and a bomb."

Stop focusing on AI and make computers for specific tasks, is Gebru and Mitchell's suggested solution.
